RQAW - Study Objective

as directed by the County Administrators and Elected Officials and the Sheriff and his whole department. (Courts,Probation,Sheriff make up almost half of county employees.)

The objective of this study is to explore and advocate for needed improvements to the Monroe County Jail and provide ideas for a facility design to support the county justice system with a focus on victim rights, community safety, and participant rehabilitation with deep consideration for financial constraints. We will accomplish this through a study of the existing system, use today's data to project for future needs and collaborate to determine the best course of action for the benefit of the county.

Good morning Michael,
The study was very well done and includes most of the information we are looking for. The data stops at 2019, so we will need to request the last four years that would be great.
Lastly, we have some quick questions for you.
How many dedicated transport vehicles do you currently have?
Are your shifts 8-hour or 12-hour? Could you staffing break down, budgets, operational costs?
Are there any new maintenance challenges since 2019-2020?
Thanks,

Hello Cole,

I posed your question "Are there any new maintenance challenges since 2019-2020?" to David Gardner who is the COO of ASI Facilities Services, and who has been contracted for maintenance of the Correctional Center for years. Here is his response:

Matt,

Here is a list off the top of my head.

1. HVAC

a. Our system was designed for 128 inmates. We currently have a capacity of 265 and the system was installed before CFM requirements were put in for proper ventilation. We struggle to keep the jail from being too hot or too cold in areas.

2. Electrical

a. Most of our panels are full and we can't add circuits for new equipment without adding piggyback breakers.

3. Plumbing

a. In 1984 copper pipe was made with some issues in materials. We are finding pin holes in our system due to the materials used at the time of construction.

b. The lines are also failing because of age and 24/7 uses since 1984. Typical buildings run 8-12 hours a day our building never stops and with the jail on the 4th and 5th floor plumbing is flowing all through the building constantly.

i. Hot water is made on the 5th floor and is continually running on a pump to keep hot water at each floor.

ii. Heating and cooling loops run from 1st floor mechanical to the 5th floor mechanical. They are 6" pipes that run with about 15 psi continually. If they have any failures, it can be catastrophic.

iii. The sanitary system never stops. We have had numerous 8" lines give way from constant use and abuse. We have our kitchen on the 5th floor with grease coming down the lines until 2019 when a grease trap was installed. We run drain snakes down the system on a weekly basis for inmate vandalism.

iv. Roof drains from a flat roof run from the 6th floor all the way through the building to the 1st floor. We have seen many signs of cracks and leaks.

c. We have seen many of the old gate valves and shut off fail to close. This causes great concern when doing routine maintenance and often leads to shutting the building completely down or freezing lines to make simple changes.

d. Over the years with add-on's and repairs we are finding most lines are back fed. Even when you shut off the lines you can't stop the flow of water from another location.

4. Building

a. Windows are failing and allowing air flow. We have had them tuck pointed in the last two years to help with this.

b. The size of our facility is of great concern. We do not have adequate space to hold inmate property, inmate classes, and programs space.

c. We don't have space for the trash and recycling this facility creates.

d. Parking is always a problem. (This is true for employees on 1st shift and visitors to the building.)

e. Elevator

i. Worn out only one no back up.

ii. Numerous breakdowns which leads to many different issues for the jail (logistics, security, safety, etc.)

5. Security

a. The cell doors and locks are out of life. We are welding doors from complete failure. Locks are faulty and not able to be repaired in some instances. When you put a new lock in because the doors are so worn you can spend 4 or 5 hours getting the door to operate properly.

Thanks,
Dave

I understand there must be a public meeting and you referenced the need to reach out to contiguous counties regarding their interest in a regional facility, so I would appreciate you providing me with that statute.

This questionnaire was sent to the following counties: Brown, Green, Jackson, Lawrence, and Morgan.

- (a) After June 30, 2018, a county may not begin the construction or reconstruction of a county jail or submit final plans and specifications for the construction or reconstruction of a county jail to the department of correction under IC 11-12-4-5, unless the county executive first:
- (1) prepares or causes to be prepared a feasibility study of possible alternatives to the construction or reconstruction of the county jail; and
 - (2) holds a public hearing on the feasibility study.
- (b) The feasibility study and public hearing under subsection (a) are not required for the construction or reconstruction of a county jail in the case of a county in which the county executive before July 1, 2018, has voted on or otherwise approved a proposal or contract concerning the construction or reconstruction of the county jail.
- (c) The feasibility study required by subsection (a) must include the following information:
- (1) The feasibility of housing inmates in the county jail of another county or in a multicounty jail established by two (2) or more counties.
 - (2) A projection of the county's future jail needs and an estimate of the number and characteristics of future inmates.
 - (3) Provide Owner's Financial Advisor any data regarding estimates of the Project costs necessary for its determination of tax rates and debt service amounts that would result from the proposed project.
- (d) The county executive shall allow the public to testify at the public hearing on the feasibility study required by subsection (a). Notice of the public hearing must be given in accordance with IC 5-3-1. The notice must state that on the given day, time, and place, the county executive will meet to discuss the feasibility study and hear testimony from the public regarding the feasibility study.

County says “We have Concerns”

Our concerns are pages 43 and 46 and 155.

Renovation versus new facility. Need to account for the intangible issues. There are costs not identified and intangible that justify a new facility over renovation.

What can we do in our new facility, we can't do in our current, even if we renovate it.

For example: Unable to provide programming space. The Constitutionality of the facility will only be for “x” number of beds, remains a warehouse instead of a source classify inmates, inability to provide mental health services..

It also doesn't address the costs associated with moving everyone out to another facility during the alleged renovation.

Jail Commander explaining beds and ACLU lawsuit to RQAW with clarity.

Per the ACLU agreement, as it pertains to the secure bed count, there are 248 beds outside of the inmate worker dorm and the detoxication/segregation beds. This number is only used only in identifying the secure bed count in the facility. When population for the available security beds reaches 244, the jail will contact the courts. We will also notify the board of commissioners and the county council. Plaintiff's counsel will be notified if the population in the available security beds exceed 258.

The secure bed count is the only place I can see where she might get that number. I'll give her a call this morning and see if can get it figured out..

Title 36. Local Government

Article 1. General Provisions

Chapter 8. Miscellaneous Fiscal and Administrative Provisions

36-1-8-19. Feasibility Study and Public Hearing Before Construction or Reconstruction of a County Jail or Submission of Final Plans and Specification to the Department of Correction; Exceptions

Sec. 19. (a) In addition to any other requirements and except as provided in subsection (b), after June 30, 2018, a county may not begin the construction or reconstruction of a county jail or submit final plans and specifications for the construction or reconstruction of a county jail to the department of correction under IC 11-12-4-5, unless the county executive first (1) prepares or causes to be prepared a feasibility study of possible alternatives to the construction or reconstruction of the county jail; and (2) holds a public hearing on the feasibility study. (b) The feasibility study and public hearing under subsection (a) are not required for the construction or reconstruction of a county jail in the case of a county in which the county executive before July 1, 2018, has voted on or otherwise approved a proposal or contract concerning the construction or reconstruction of the county jail.(c) The feasibility study required by subsection (a)(1) must include the following information:The feasibility of housing inmates in the county jail of another county or in a multicounty jail established by two (2) or more counties.

(1)(2) A projection of the county's future jail needs and an estimate of the number and characteristics of future inmates.

(3) An estimate of the costs, tax rates, and debt service amounts that would result from each of the alternatives addressed by the feasibility study.

(d) The county executive shall allow the public to testify at the public hearing on the feasibility study required by subsection (a)(1). Notice of the public hearing must be given in accordance with IC 5-3-1. The notice must state that on the given day, time, and place, the county executive will meet to discuss the feasibility study and hear testimony from the public regarding the feasibility study.

<https://bsquarebulletin.com/2024/04/29/report-monroe-county-should-build-new-jail-with-450-500-beds-not-renovate-current-one/>

Monroe County sheriff Ruben Marté was keen to establish that even though the 450-bed figure is one that he supports as the correct number for a new jail, the idea is not to fill such a jail to capacity. Marté put it like this: “When we say either 450 to 500 beds, people automatically think...we want to fill those. That is not the case.”

Marté gave the example of the COVID-19 pandemic as a reason to have a bigger facility — in case the inmate population had to be separated.

- County commissioner Lee Jones indicated that the recommendation to build new, as opposed to renovating, was expected: “None of this comes as a big surprise.” Jones added, “Given the amount of money that we’re pouring into our current facility, it does seem like the wisest path forward would be a new facility.”

Other jail business news in Indiana

ANDERSON — The last legal hurdles to the construction of a new Madison County jail will be considered by the Anderson Board of Zoning Appeals.

The board on Wednesday will mull a request by Madison County Commissioners for a special exception required for the jail. The BZA meets at 4:30 p.m. in the council chambers of the Anderson City Building.

The county is also requesting variances from the required 80 acres for a correctional facility, construction within 300 feet of a residential area and a sign variance.

The staff of the Anderson Municipal Development Department recommends approval of the special exception and the three variances, noting it will provide additional safety and security in north Anderson and the location is ideal for other cities and towns needing the services.

Last month, Anderson City Council approved a change in zoning for the jail construction. Council on Thursday passed the ordinance unanimously with no questions from the council or public comments for the rezoning of the former Meijer property on Broadway.

The county is buying the property from Meijer for $795,000 and plans to build a facility at a cost of $110.5 million to house 550 inmates and include the administrative offices for the sheriff's department.

The jail is proposed for a 26-acre site within the entire 47-acre location to the west of the Wendy's restaurant. The jail facility and administrative offices will be a 169,100-square-foot, two-story structure that will include 250 parking spaces.

According to the petition, the jail itself will be 700 feet from the nearest residential housing structures.

There will be an entrance along Broadway and entrances on Hartman Road and Scott Street.

Sanjay Patel, project manager with RQAW Architecture, previously said the main entrance to the facility would be off Broadway and the administrative offices would face east.

Madison County seeking special exception for new jail

That's our report guy!

A new 1,056-bed Howard County jail that would meet the county's current and projected future needs would cost around $200 million to build, according to a feasibility study and needs assessment, but county officials aren't sold the county needs that big of a jail and are even more hesitant to spend such an amount.

That's one bit of information out of many included in a report released in July by DLZ, an Indianapolis-based design and consulting firm.

The company was hired by Howard County Commissioners in early 2023 to complete the report, which has been talked about by elected officials in private but has never been detailed or discussed extensively in public before now.

The report includes detailed visual observations on the current condition of the county jail, which is now more than 30 years old, its deficiencies, a needs forecast through 2045 and cost estimates to either expand the current jail by 400 beds or build a completely new one that has either 880 or 1,056 beds.

county's current jail

The Howard County Jail, located at 1800 W. Markland Ave., was built in 1993 at a price tag of about $18 million ($33 million when adjusted for inflation) after the county faced lawsuits from inmates alleging they were subject to "miserable" and unconstitutional living conditions.

Before building the new jail, a federal court at the time ordered the county keep the inmate population below 101. In the early 1990s, the county jail had an average daily inmate population of 130.

According to the county, the jail's average daily population in 2021 was 457. It was 487 at the end of 2022, 134% above capacity. The facility is rated for 364 beds.

The inmate population, though, has decreased over the last year. As of Thursday, the jail's population was 347. That is still technically "overcrowded" as the Indiana Department of Corrections classifies an overcrowded jail as one exceeds 80% capacity. That's because at over 80% capacity, it becomes tough to segregate certain inmate populations.

At the time of its construction, the county jail was state-of-the-art and the first jail in the state to implement an "open concept," or direct supervision model, according to Tribune archives. Then-Sheriff John D. Beatty said the new jail had boosted the morale of inmates, deputies and corrections officers.

Howard County
Indiana is having DLZ

against current jail.
Current Jail built to lawsuit. Expansion

-you bet.

But more than 30 years later — at around the same age the county's previous jail was replaced — the Howard County Jail is beginning to show its age.

According to the DLZ report, the jail, in general, is in fair to poor condition, and many of its components are outdated and in need of replacement or inadequate for modern needs.

The inmate showers, according to the report, are in poor condition, the jail cell toilets and sinks are porcelain when they should be detention grade stainless steel; the jail's kitchen is small for the approximately 500,000 meals a year served and many doors in the secured area are not detention grade, have failed and several of them and their frames are rusting.

The jail also does not have an electronic water management system that would allow corrections officers to manage and control water flow, preventing inmates from passing contraband or flooding their cells.

The jail's dayroom mezzanines do not have vertical screens to protect from falls; staff work posts are in poor condition and the staff quarters and amenities for a jail this size are limited, according to the report.

In addition, the jail has issues with leaks from its water pipes, according to the report.

In summary, DLZ writes, the county jail has some anticipated life expectancy remaining to still be an effective facility. However, significantly more rated beds are needed now.

completely new jail

According to DLZ, a 1,056 rated bed jail would cost the county between $165 million to $175 million in construction costs. That's not including another 20% in soft costs, i.e., planning and administrative costs, bringing the total to between $198 million and $210 million, not including increases due to inflation or costs of goods increases.

The company, in the report, said it used inmate data and trends over the past several years, as well as county demographics, bookings, releases, average daily jail population and average length of stay to come up with its recommendations.

DLZ's proposal for the 1,056-bed jail calls for building a modern 270,000- to 310,000-square-feet jail to deal with inmates with mental health issues and addiction.

That includes specific housing units for mentally-ill inmates, de-escalation rooms, detoxification units, a step-down system for suicide prevention, a more therapeutic environment that has access to spaces with fresh air, sunlight and the offering of structured programming.

For job retention, DLZ proposes modern and large workout and training rooms for staff, as well as incorporating as much natural light as possible in staff areas and intake and booking areas.

The 1,056 rated bed jail is the most expensive and extensive option DLZ proposes.

Its report offers two other cheaper options — expanding the jail to add 400 rated beds and building a 880 rated new jail — at costs of $35 million to $40 million and $140 million to $150 million, respectively. Those figures do not include “soft costs,” which would approximately add 20% of cost to those totals.

Notably not included in the report are costs to extensively renovate the jail or the cost to do a mixture of adding beds and renovating. Also missing is any mechanism to finance any extension of the existing jail or construction of a new jail.

What the sheriff wants

Howard County Sheriff Jerry Asher has been clear in the past about his desire for a new jail, but he told the Tribune he doesn’t think the county needs as big of a jail as the one DLZ recommends.

How big of a jail does he think the county needs?

“I would rely on the experts that deal with these things every day, but I think we’re going to at least be around a 600 to 700 (bed) range,” Asher said. “I don’t think the 800 or 1,000 bed facility is necessary.”

Asher’s proposal also includes renovating the current jail so it can be the new home of the county’s work release program, which is currently housed in the county’s old jail building, 623 S. Berkeley Road.

The new space would allow the work release program to expand its capacity. Currently, the program has a capacity of 120 beds, 80 for males and 40 for females.

For the new jail, Asher said he also wants the county to move back to an indirect supervision style jail because it’s less labor intensive and it’s the format the vast majority of in-state counties are implementing.

In addition, the sheriff would like to see a specific area and cells for inmates dealing with mental health issues.

“We house most of our mental health situations in the book-in area, and that’s not what that area is designed for,” Asher said. “So building a new facility, we can have a medical wing and have some of those different things for the mental health part because that is a huge, huge problem in our county and pretty much every county.”

Where would the new jail be built?

That's one of the biggest unknowns for Asher's proposal. The county currently doesn't own property big enough to build a new 600- to 700-bed jail. The cost to implement Asher's proposal is also currently unknown.

For answers to that question and more, Asher said a jail committee is being formed. Its first meeting is scheduled for the end of this month.

OFFICIALS REACT

While the DLZ report makes it clear the company believes the county needs a newer and larger jail, not all county officials agree with that sentiment, or, at the very least, they want more information before making any decision.

"I'd like to be sure there is no way that we can renovate (the jail) and keep the costs down for the taxpayers," Councilwoman Martha Lake, R-at large, said. "We want a jail that passes inspection. We want a jail that is safe for both the prisoners and the people who are working there. We want it to be efficient. At the same time, I just want to be sure a new jail is exactly what we need, especially with the cost we're looking at."

Many county officials told the Tribune they were left with sticker shock after receiving the study by DLZ.

"I think we all left that night with our jaws on the floor," County Council Vice President Daryl Maple, R-at large, said about learning of the cost estimates given by DLZ.

Maple told the Tribune that he, too, would like to see more options for renovation before committing such a large amount of money.

What the County Council is willing to do is paramount to what, or what doesn't happen, when it comes to a new or renovated jail as the elected board is the sole authority over issuing any bond debt or tax increases for financing purposes.

To be clear, the county has taken no significant steps to either renovate the current jail or build a new jail.

The deteriorating condition of the jail and the fact it's often overcrowded have been known issues for the last several years, but the price of extensive renovation or building a new jail has kept any major action to extensively renovate or build a new jail at bay, at least for now.

The county also wanted to let its community corrections programs, such as work release, and the county's magistrate judge, who handles initial hearings for those arrested, run their course and hopefully alleviate the jail's overcrowding issue.

After a slow start, the initiatives, especially after the County Council approved the hiring of a dedicated public defender and prosecutor for the magistrate court, appear to be having an impact.

Still, the jail's consistent overcrowding issue may force the county's hand one way or another.

As previously reported by the Tribune, the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana, on behalf of an inmate, is suing the county and Asher for what it describes as a "chronically and seriously overcrowded" jail that violates the U.S. Constitution.

The ACLU is asking a federal court to order that the county make any and all improvements to the jail so that it complies with the U.S. Constitution. The lawsuit is currently in litigation.

The lawsuit is reminiscent of a similar one filed against the old jail a little more than 30 years ago — also by the ACLU of Indiana — that led to the county building its current jail.
